FADE IN:

EXT. TILT YARD - DAY

A tilt yard has been erected upon a meadow. Parallel to the yard is a makeshift stand seated by stern-looking NOBLES.

On the other side, behind a rope fence, on their feet are tightly packed PEASANTS. Kids sit on their parents' shoulders. Mugs are filled with mead from barrels. CHEERS and WHISTLES express their merriment.

TWO JOUSTERS atop their HORSES face each other at the opposite ends of the yard. Both in FULL PLATE ARMOR.

Their well-trodden paths are separated by a two-hundred feet long, four feet tall, rope-and-pole rail.

On one end is THOMAS (26) who -- unlike his armor -- is in his prime. He is a knight whose heart is in the right place.

In his left hand he holds the horse's reins and a shield. Under his other arm is the tail end of a TEN-FOOT-LONG LANCE. Its coronel, metal tip, IS POINTED UP SIGNALING READINESS.

On the other end of the yard a KNIGHT -- similarly equipped -- struggles with his horse as it keeps rearing. Finally, the Knight calms his mare, points his lance skyward.

The jousters spur their mounts forward.

They gain speed. Two units consisting of thousands of pounds of horse, man and armor gallop towards one another.

Gradually, the riders lower their lances, take aim.

Just before impact, as per routine, they release the reins and turn their heads away.

In the middle of the yard they CLASH.

Thomas receives a blow on his vamplate, the hand guard, of his lance but is unaffected.

His lance SHATTERS upon striking the left shoulder of the Knight who twists, falls to the ground face first. THUD.

The Knight -- right foot stuck in the stirrup -- gets dragged towards the end of the yard by his horse.

The Peasants ROAR their approval.

In the stand a TOURNEY HERALD announces loudly:
